City Schools And The American Dream: Reclaiming The Promise Of Public Education (Multicultural Education Series (New York, N.Y.).)

Synopsis

Pedro Noguera argues that higher standards and more tests, by themselves, will not make low-income urban students any smarter and the schools they attend more successful without substantial investment in the communities in which they live. Drawing on extensive research performed in San Francisco, Oakland, Berkeley, and Richmond, Noguera demonstrates how school and student achievement is influenced by social forces such as demographic change, poverty, drug trafficking, violence, and social inequity. Readers get a detailed glimpse into the lives of teachers and students working "against the odds" to succeed. Noguera sends a strong message to those who would have urban schools "shape up or shut down": invest in the future of these students and schools, and we can reach the kind of achievement and success that typify only more privileged communities. Public schools are the last best hope for many poor families living in cities across the nation. Noguera gives politicians, policymakers, and the public its own standard to achieve, provide the basic economic and social support so that teachers and students can get the job done!

Great book

The book came very quickly. It is a favorite, as it is the second time I've purchased it.

dr. noguera takes all the intuitive knowledge teachers, parents and other stakeholders have about what to do for public education, adds a dash of theory, and creates a "recipe" for what needs to be dished out to save our schools. we don't have to wait for superman!

I think this is a great book for urban ed course. If I ever become a professor I will use it in my courses.

The book was great. Informative and a definite must for those who want to learn more about the education system in California, and all the problems surrounding it.

Pedro Noguera offers hope and ideas for urban education from his own personal experience working in the Bay area. Definitely recommended.
